Make even senescence-like growth arrest is rapidly induced by hydrogen peroxide and similar effects were found for primary human diploid fibroblasts after a p21 ras -mediated increase in intracellular ROS levels and in fibroblast cultures exposed to 8-methoxypsoralen followed by UVA irradiation. Earlier studies with human diploid fibroblasts have shown that cells exhibit a prolonged life span if grown at low oxygen tension. Furthermore, experiments with buthionine-sulfoximine, a specific inhibitor of glutathione biosynthesis, showed that the intracellular redox state modulates the balance between self-renewal and differentiation in dividing glial precursor cells. This conclusion is supported by the observation that replicative senescence of human fibroblasts is associated with a dysregulation of the AP-1 transcription factor and with changes in the posttranslational modification of the Fos protein. Replication-incompetent cell types express new sets of genes, but the corresponding gene products do not appear to be functionally relevant. Allow the students to answer.
