Rather, even on this basic level, we distinguish already between mere physical objects and objects that are more like us. See also Meltzoff and Brooks Mechanisms of basic empathy might therefore be interpreted as providing us with a perceptual and non-conceptual basis for developing an intersubjectively accessible folk psychological framework that is applicable to the subject and observed other. Stueber - This interpretation has however been criticized by researchers and philosophers who think that neural resonance presupposes rather than provides us with an understanding of what is going on in the minds of others. Csibra, Hickok and At least as far as empathy for pain is concerned, our neural resonance is also modulated by a variety of contextual factors, such as how close we feel to the observed subject, whether we regard the pain to be morally justified as in the case of punishment, for example or whether we regard it as unavoidable and necessary, such as in a medical procedure.
